THE BELLS BENEATH BRACKENFORD

Kael Drakeshield | Session 2

Beneath the Streets

Returned to the tower in daylight and questioned Bram. He said the missing bell-ringers had been seen speaking to someone near the old pump house.

Found the pump house on the southern side of town.

Met Mera Venn, the town's municipal locksmith and keeper of the sluice gates. Older half-elf woman, grey hair tied back, missing two fingers on her right hand.

She was initially reluctant to help but eventually told us her nephew Jory had gone missing after investigating noises in the sewers.

She gave us an iron key stamped with three waves. Opens the old sluice gate and provides access to the older sewer network.

Mera said: "Whatever is down there, don't let it hear you singing."

Not sure whether this was a joke.

Found Jory in a side chamber below the town. Alive, although badly shaken. He claimed that men in dark robes had been taking people through the tunnels.

Exploration findings:

- Old drainage system connects several buildings.
- There are newer passages built over older stonework.
- Blue lanterns positioned at regular intervals.
- Strange markings painted onto the walls.
- A locked iron door with the same three-wave symbol.

Combat against several hooded cultists and two large creatures made of mud and bones.

Loot recovered:

- 32 gold.
- A silver ring with a black stone.
- Two vials of blue liquid.
- A piece of parchment containing a rough map of the tunnels.

One cultist escaped through a drainage channel.

Jory told us the cultists referred to something called the Ashen Choir.

Mera confirmed the missing people had probably been taken beneath the bellfoundry.

Returned Jory to Mera. She was extremely grateful.